Fun game with a lot of potential. Have already ridden distance from Boston to NYC. Often end up drenched in sweat when I get off. Still needs some polish in the games and more options, but definitely is keeping me exercising when I would normally not want to.. I have been very pleasantly surprised by the immersion level and addictive play in the VirZOOM Arcade. The obvious main purpose for buying an exercise bike is for, well - exercise. What I really love about VirZOOM is the fact that the magic of VR makes me forget that I am exercising. I find myself pedaling for a solid hour, and not even thinking about the fact that I am exercising. I find I can get my heart rate up and keep it at the desired level with active VR games like the cycle race simulations, and then if I need a more passive period of time to catch my breath, a circuit around the koi pond for 10 minutes allows for some cooldown. The tank games hold my attention, and the race car requires some fast and heart pounding pedaling. So the diversity of the experiences holds my interests well. No denying that the cost of this experience is very high. Counting the cost of my HTC Vive, the computer I needed to buy to run VR software effectively and the $400 for the VirZOOM stationary bike, this is not a cheap exercise program. But, I've spent similar amounts of cash on gym memberships over time and found reasons to give up on the gym. The variety and distraction ability of a VR exercise platform convinces me that this is an exercise regimen that I will stick with, I will enjoy and that will prove cost effective in terms of health benefits. I'm a fan of VirZOOM. It has been worth the investment for me.. very good game indeed i almost like it as much as the original yourself fitness. Fun game with a lot of potential.
